

CEPI, European Association of Real Estate Professions

Statement on commitment towards inclusion and diversity

Real estate agents and property managers are often the first direct point of contact in all matters related to one of the most important aspects of a person's life: their home.

Representing over 250,000 real estate professionals all over Europe, CEPI strongly advocates for more inclusion, equality, and representation in the profession, as well as the elimination of all non-ethical and discriminatory barriers to access the sector.

In fact, CEPI believes that fostering diversity and multiculturalism is the key to achieving better relations with clients, colleagues, and overall, a healthier and more accessible market.

CEPI fully endorses the professionalism of all its affiliated real estate agents and property managers, whom CEPI trusts to always act with the protection of consumers in mind, regardless of their race or ethnicity, gender identity, sexual orientation, religious beliefs or absence thereof, age, disability, socioeconomic status and/or background, political beliefs and/or affiliation, or any other related status, quality, or belief.

CEPI's commitment starts in its Brussels office and it continues through the activities of its members who have subscribed to our European Code of Conduct including a strong point on high ethical standards and subscription to a non-discrimination clause and the EU Charter of Fundamental Rights.

Lastly, we strongly believe in the role that digitalisation and technology can play in building a more inclusive and accessible real estate sector. In this perspective, CEPI is moving towards a more digitalized and therefore more inclusive and equal way of working for all professionals in Europe, and abroad.
